This Way to the EGRESS | Onward! Up A Frightening Creek

"The band's sound is a colorful collision of ragged rock, skewed eastern European beats, gipsy ska, sultry tangos and other brands of unclassifiable musical mayhem... This Way to the EGRESS impresses with their own absolute relentless energy, versatility and voice." —Glide Magazine

If Tom Waits and Patti Smith made a musical lovechild it would sound a bit like EGRESS. Whether you know them as the "dance band to ring in the end of the world" or by their "raise a glass and drop a beat" attitude, EGRESS will leave their mark on you as the six-person troupe cascades onto the stage in an explosion of sound and sight. Described as equal parts unruly vaudeville, ebullient world-beat and three ring circus, they play an amalgamation of worldly genres catapulting their audience through time and space with unexpected shifts of styles, tempos and time signatures.

EGRESS is Taylor Galassi (lead vocals, accordion, piano); Sarah Shown (vocals, piano, violin); John Wentz (tuba, backup vocals); Joe Lynch (trombone, backup vocals); Jaclyn Kidd (guitar, banjo) and Nick Pecca (drums and percussion). Hailing from a wide variety of musical backgrounds with a diverse array of influences, EGRESS crafts intricately arranged audible cocktails which will be sure to make you move. Their rambunctious stage show generates enough energy to light up a small city while their genre-bending miscellany leaves the audience wondering what will happen next.

With the successful release of their 2015 album behind them, EGRESS released their fourth LP, Onward! Up A Frightening Creek. It was recorded at Vibromonk Studios in Brooklyn, NYC and unleashed onto unsuspecting listeners September 22, 2017. With singles See No Evil & Rollin' released 6/27 and 8/10 of 2017 the album closer "Going Home Again" music video was released September 5th.
